Biographical note:

Bettye Lane began work as a free-lance photographer in 1959; she studied photojournalism at Boston University's School of Public Relations and Communications from 1959-1962. Then, as a photojournalist, Lane began documenting the human condition and human rights movements in 1965. Although Lane photographed a variety of subject matters, her concentration was on equal and civil rights movements such as those for African-Americans, gays and lesbians, and women, as well as anti-war and – nuclear movements.

According to the biography of Lane on her website, <http://bettyelane.com>, her photographs have appeared in over seventy publications and have been exhibited in the United States and Europe.

Included are photographs of gay civil rights marches, protests against certain movies and television programs, AIDS demonstrations, Anita Bryant protests, Lesbian Feminist Liberation actions, women's rights marches, and gay and lesbian pride marches.

The photographs contained in this collection may not be reproduced in any manner without written permission of the photographer. Bettye Lane may be contacted at photojournal70@aol.com concerning permission.
