Biographical Note

Brooke Hayward, the writer, was born July 5, 1937. Hayward is the oldest of three children born to Margaret Sullavan and Leland Hayward. Bridget Hayward was born in 1939. William "Bill" Hayward was born in 1942.

Hayward's growing up years were chaotic. There were several moves between California and Connecticut with the last to Greenwich, Connecticut, in 1948 after Margaret Sullavan was divorced from Leland Hayward.

Sullavan wanted her children to have a "normal" childhood, and isolated them from the evils of Hollywood. The children lived in a separate house with a nurse (nanny) and a cook. A tutor taught Hayward and her siblings at home for the first few years of their life. When they were older, Brooke and Bridget attended Greenwich Academy a private girls school, where Jane Fonda was a classmate. Bill Hayward and Peter Fonda attended Brunswick, a boy's school around the corner from Greenwich Academy.

In the fall of 1953, the Hayward children (Brooke, Bridget and Bill) all left home to attend boarding schools. Hayward attended Madeira, a private girls school in McLean, Virginia; Bridget went to Gstaad, Switzerland and Bill to Lawrenceville in New Jersey. Brooke attended Madeira her junior and senior years, graduating in 1955 going on to Vassar and Yale.

By the time Hayward was 22 years of age she had married Michael Thomas, an art historian and budding investment banker, whom she met at Yale. They had two children, Jeffrey and Willie. After Hayward divorced Thomas, she and the children moved into New York City, and she began a modeling and acting career.

In December 1959, Hayward was starring in an Off-Broadway production of Marching Song, when she learned of her mother's death. Margaret Sullavan died of an accidental drug overdose January 1, 1960. At this time, both Bridget and Bill were patients in mental asylum", Austen Riggs in Stockbridge, Massachusetts and Menninger's in Topeka, Kansas, respectively.

In October 1960, Bridget Hayward died of a drug overdose just 8 months after her mother.

Leland Hayward died in 1971 at home, after an extensive hospital stay following an unsuccessful surgery.

Hayward was married to Dennis Hopper, 1961-1969; they had one child, a daughter, Marin. Hopper worked closely with Peter Fonda (a long-time Sullavan/Hayward family friend) and Bill Hayward on the movie Easy Rider.

Hayward married Peter Duchin, the orchestra leader, in December 1985. She has three grandchildren, Anna, Cooper and Violet.

Scope and Content Note

The Television folder consists of clippings of Sullavan's 1948 television appearance on Studio One. # Series III: Photographs, 1911-1960

[2 boxes]

This series has three distinctive parts: movies, theatre and personal life. The photos have been removed from scrapbook pages. For the most part there is no identification on or about the photos. The Movies folders contain publicity stills from ten of the seventeen movies in which Margaret Sullavan starred. They have been divided by movie when possible. The theatre folders contain publicity stills from several theatre productions that Margaret Sullavan starred in. There is also included some early photos of the University Players, including Henry Fonda. The folders titled personal are divided into four sections. They include photographs of the Hayward children, Brooke Hayward and Bill Hayward as adults, several headshots of Leland Hayward. There are many photographs of Margaret Sullavan as a child and teenager, along with her parents and siblings. There are included publicity shots of Sullavan's personal life; these usually were used in magazine and newspaper articles. In addition there are vacation and family snapshots, with fourth husband, Kenneth Wagg and his children.
